

A public document trail with private questions still open

An investigative source map separating public facts from approval, clearance, access, and communications questions that require new records or testimony.

WHY THIS MAY BE A STORY

The strongest investigative frame is not a conclusion; it is a clean map of what can be established now and what still needs reporting.

THREE CHECKABLE STARTING POINTS

Record point 01

Public records establish selected dates, filings, statements, posts, videos, and transactions.

Record point 02

They do not establish who at Mattel or any license partner saw Lucky Machines' work, what searches were run, or how approvals moved internally.

Record point 03

Those unanswered questions require interviews, voluntary records, formal discovery, or compulsory process where legally available.

REPORTING INVITATION

A useful next step

Use the open questions as reporting tasks, not as implied findings, and seek response from Mattel independently.

The full brief preserves chronology, source notes, and the evidence boundary.
